

From evolution to revolution:

Benefits data enablement is here.

FIRST

There was siloed data.

For decades, most large employers relied on carriers to send infrequent, siloed benefit data feeds. The data was often outdated, impossible to selectively share and cumbersome to use, making it hard to evaluate vendors and correlate insights.

THEN

The data warehouse.

Many benefit teams have now shifted to data warehouses with analytics to store structured and semi-structured data and produce basic reports. They are used mainly for data collection, analysis data consolidation, and reporting of data from multiple sources. However, they're still stymied by diverse data types, a reliance on consultants, and a lack of data sharing agility.

NOW

There's data enablement.

A more agile and efficient approach, true data enablement platforms offer everything a data warehouse solution can, yet they also give organizations the control and agility to do much more with their data.

- Utilize and control any data, any way you want
- Share specific data sets with only the vendors you choose
- Evaluate individual vendor performance
- Analyze member data and outcomes to create more tailored benefits
- Perform advanced analytics and reporting easily, without consultants
- Ensure data security, privacy and compliance across your entire ecosystem
